A minstrel show is billed for August the nineteenth, at the Ilwaco opera house. In the past Ilwaco has not been favored with very many good shows, consequently the people are not very enthusiastically over this but from all reports, by people who have seen the show, we believe it to be all that is represented.

HE DIDN'T LIKE THE JOB, PERHAPS

PRISONER SET TO WORK ON THE STREETS MAKES A SUCCESSFUL DASH FOR LIBERTY.

Chief of Police Gammal yesterday turned over three prisoners who were serving time in the city jail to the superintendent of streets, with the object in view of having them work on the public highways.

One of the prisoners was M. S. Paragoda, a young and flashy Greek. Paragoda worked for a few hours and then made his escape. He was with the other men up on Eighth street, and finally edged his way to a position near some bushes and then made a sudden dash for liberty into them. No particular effort was then made to apprehend him, and later the police, when informed of the matter, expressed very little regret. They feel that if he does get away that he went show up in Astoria for a long time to come and that is what they mostly desire.

Paragoda was arrested by Patrolmen Wilson and Houghten several nights ago and charged with being an idle and dissolute person. He looked as if he never had done a day's hard labor in his life, and probably the job on the streets yesterday wasn't after his liking. A city ordinance provides that city prisoners may be worked on the public streets.

JANSSEN HELD FOR GRAND JURY

MAN WHO ATTACKED HINDUS IS BOUND OVER—HE DIDN'T ESCAPE FROM THE FRACAS UNSCATHED, EITHER.

At the conclusion of his hearing yesterday afternoon before Justice Goodman on a charge of assaulting one or more Hindus with a knife, Emil Janssen was bound over under bonds of $500. His case will be presented to the grand jury in September.

Janssen apparently had no means of securing bail and was taken to the county jail. It is possible that some of his friends will endeavor to make some arrangements for the bond.

Janssen's hearing in justice court was not without interest. First of all, he was without a lawyer, though one had been retained to represent him. Because he was not represented by an attorney Janssen was carefully advised by Justice Goodman, and was told that he could either go upon the witness stand in his own defense or not, and apparently he was willing to do this, but as such a course would have placed him at a great disadvantage he was advised by the court not to do so. Because of his lack of familiarity with legal procedure and also of the English tongue, he probably would not have made a very good showing on the witness stand without an attorney to watch and guard his course, and for that reason the court apparently deemed it best for him not to attempt a defense at this time. The defendant agreed to this and was then bound over.

Mr. Curtis, Janssen's attorney, was not backward in stating his reasons yesterday afternoon for failing to appear. He says that he waited all the morning for the prosecution to get ready, and that he could not "dilly-dally" any longer; and when afternoon came and he was suddenly notified that all was in readiness for the trial to proceed that he then could not very well go, inasmuch as he had to get out the week's issue of The Herald, of which Mr. Curtis is the publisher. Besides this, he says he did not intend to make any defense for Janssen at this time, but will make his fight for his client in the circuit court. The prosecution, on the other hand, denies vigorously that there was any unnecessary delay in advancing the cause to a hearing.

The little court room was crowded with interested auditors. With the aid of an interpreter one or more of the Hindus told the story of the bloody affray, substantially as told in these columns before. A surprising feature of the whole matter is that Janssen, who has a magnificent physical build, with arms and shoulders denoting extraordinary strength, was actually bested for a time by one of the dark-hued Hindus, whose appearance rather denotes timidity and little muscular vigor than arms and a body to have met the fierce onslaughts of the brawny longshoreman. But Janssen did not come out of the fracas unscathed. The man who fought him successfully also bit Janssen almost as a wildcat would have bitten. Six scars on Janssen's big body show the marks of the Hindu's teeth, and in one or two places the scars look as if made by an animal's teeth. The Hindu had bitten through a heavy woolen shirt, too.

Janssen, however, says that when the whole crowd of Hindus jumped on him to pull him away from the one, that they all bit him. This is denied by white and brown witnesses, however.

A MEMORABLE NIGHT WITH EAGLES

JAMES J. STOKES, EX-ASTORIAN, SENDS DOWN A SUPERB IVORY GAVEL TO THE LOCAL AERIA, FROM ALASKA.

Last night was made memorable and happy for the members of Astoria Aerie, No. 17, Fraternal Order of Eagles when, at the proper moment, with a short rest liking for the pleasant task, Secretary C. E. Foster arose and read the following fraternal letter and bestowed the beautiful gift, both sent, through Mr. Foster's hands, to the Aerie by James J. Stokes, formerly of this city, but now dwelling and flourishing at Nome, Alaska:

"Nome, Alaska, July 12, 1908.
 "Astoria Aerie, No. 17, F. O. E., "Astoria, Ore.

"Dear Brothers:—In today's mail, under separate cover I am sending you a gavel, that was made by the natives; it is from a piece of old ivory that has been dug from tundra and is in all probability several hundred years old, the etchings made on the sides of the gavel are the work of Happy Jack, the best worker in ivory that is on this peninsula, and from it you can get an idea of how clever some of the natives become in art.

"Nome Aerie No. 75 has a very nice home in this city, owning their own building, and which is valued at about $60,000, and in these buildings we have our lodge room which is about 50 by 60 feet on the second floor, with ante rooms in front; and downstairs is used for club rooms for the members; this floor is covered with carpets and contains pool and card tables, reading desks, chess and checker tables, and book cases, and then we have a ball room is 140 feet deep by 65 feet wide, two stories in height, but the second story is used for a balcony and in front of this balcony is a large banquet room; in the north end of this structure is a modern stage and in the south end are two lobbies or the right side is for men and on the other side is for the exclusive use of the women and both elegantly furnished with plate mirrors, plush and Russia-leather furniture. We have also quite a gym attached to the hall. Our lodge contains a membership of several hundred. Wishing you all the best of good health and success.

"Yours in L. T. J. & E.,
 "JAS. P. STOKES."

The gavel is probably the handsomest thing of its kind on the lower coast and is splendidly finished and engraved; and forms, now, and forever, one of the cherished treasures and fixtures of "No. 17," every member of which delighted in scrutinizing the beautiful emblem.
